

Dear FCC:

Please do not invalidate New Jersey's Do Not Call list. My homelife has demonstrably improved since this list's institution because i no longer get bothered by telemarketing calls. These calls infringe on my right to a peaceful home environment.

Besides, if the FCC causes New Jersey's Do Not Call list to be weakened in any way, I will want to hunt down the FCC commissioners' personal home phone numbers, and make thousands of calls to their homes using telemarketing equipment i would have to buy, start up a telemarketing business that can somehow legally call them, and bother the heck out of them with incessant phone calls.

Plus, we have connections up here. We'll send Tony Soprano after all of them and toss in Little Steven's wrath to boot. He can get Bruce Springsteen and the band to join him in blasting their homes with the loudest rock music they've ever heard. (At least it will be good music, so if they have kids, it'll only bother the FCC Commissioner & his/her spouse. At least this would be more sensitive than your dopey initiative to bow to the low-life telemarketing jerks who believe they should be able to make their livelihoods by imposing on other peoples' lives.

Don't weaken New Jersey's law. It's a really bad idea.

Sincerely

L. Richard Mariani
